Jobs For Unemployed Is Greatest Recovery Problem, Maj. Berry Says

Industrial Coordinator Tells Industry Prosperity Is A Sham Unless It Includes Re-employment for 11,000,000 Out-of-work and Removing Them and Their Families From Dependency.

By A. F. of L. News Service.
Washington, D. C.—The absolute necessity of solving the unemployment crisis, which has entered into its second year, was emphasized by Major George L. Berry, Coordinator of Industrial Cooperation, in a speech before the Industrial Conference, which was attended by over 2,000 persons connected with industry, labor and consumers.

Unemployment for Conference
Major Berry announced that the conference was favored by 90 percent of the workers and management organizations and 74 per cent of the general public. He said that the structure of the country, relative to the business minority which failed to solve the unemployment problem, was a failure.

Major Berry said: "Those who have decided to participate in this conference are not only interested in the recovery of the country, but also in the recovery of the individual. It is the duty of the Federal Government to see that the recovery of the individual is not overlooked."
